Increasingly government agencies are using auditors to recover overpayments from providers. In just the initial pilot study, the Recover Audit Contractor (RAC) program found $1.03 billion in overpayments. The success of that program motivated Congress to increase the size of the RAC program and to create Medicaid Integrity Contracts (MICs) that will target Medicaid overpayments. All indications show that these programs are nearing the end of their preparations period and that providers will start feeling their impact soon.

Presenters

Brad Schutjer is a co-founder of Schutjer Bogar LLC, and is part of the firm's Medicaid eligibility, collections, and labor and employment practice groups. He counsels LTC clients on Medicaid eligibility issues and policies. He represents employers of all sizes, in matters ranging from employment discrimination and FMLA issues, to the drafting and enforcement of employment contracts and employee handbooks. He also practices traditional labor law.

This program, using real world examples and actual findings from auditing programs, will educate participants about the RAC and MIC process and make recommendations for providers to aid them in preparing for these programs. We will identify areas that providers can improve on now to avoid problems before they arise. We also will recommend strategies to respond to the RAC and MIC auditors when they do contact you.
